Last year Castle Lite took Unlocks into Africa, with Future Unlocking Extra Cold in Mozambique and Tanzania. This year Castle Lite is going even bigger with Chance the Rapper, Nadia Nakai, Frank Casino and Shane Eagle in South Africa, while the concert in Nigeria will showcase Davido, Wizkid and J Cole. The brand aims to make the impossible possible by Unlocking progressive, never before seen, felt or heard, experiences to fans of Extra Cold.

■ How does music tie into the message the brand is trying to convey to its audience/consumers and why did you decide to focus on hip-hop specifically?

Music is the single biggest passion point for our consumers, and like Castle Lite, hip-hop as a genre is innovative, progressive and extremely expressive. Castle Lite breaks boundaries and hip-hop is a natural fit with the brand's DNA. It is an unapologetic form of music – fluid and real and as a brand we aim to be at the forefront of hip-hop, partnering with artists, local and global, that like Castle Lite, push boundaries and do things differently.

■ How do the Unlock music experiences add value to your brand? Why do you think it has been so successful?

Castle Lite's brand purpose is to Unlock 'extraordinary enjoyment' and the Unlocks concerts allow the brand to bring its purpose to life in an immersive experience for consumers.

Consumers know that this concert is about more than just the artist – the brand brings the experience to life through never before seen technology, the biggest screens ever on the African continent and music that can't be heard or experienced anywhere but, on this stage, every single touchpoint aims to make the experience extraordinary.

■ Castle Lite is known for its innovative use of technology. How important is innovation to the brand, specifically from a marketing standpoint?

Innovation is what drives Castle Lite – the brand is always at the forefront of technology, making drinking beer easier in some cases, but more fun in most. Our innovation aims to unlock new spaces for consumers to enjoy Castle Lite. And while we innovate in our packaging, we also take this philosophy into events, artist selection and merchandise. Everything the brand touches is pushed to be different and innovative.
