With the new trend towards semi-gration, South Africans are moving out of city centres into smaller towns and areas. According to media reports, semi-gration is a significant trend in South Africa, with people moving from inland to the coastal parts of the country.

Real estate players and moving companies report they have witnessed significant movements between Durban and Johannesburg routes. According to real estate experts, many of these semi-grations are currently due to the concept of online or remote working changing our lifestyles so drastically.

As per the statement issued by Biggles Removals, the moving company in South Africa has been taking advantage of these trends to launch new routes. They also increased their staff number to serve these moves as cost effectively as possible.

According to Biggles Removals spokesperson Carla-Mari Moore, Durban to Cape Town, Johannesburg to Cape Town, Durban to Johannesburg and Johannesburg to Durban are some of the routes that have witnessed the highest number of movements. The number of teams operating in all routes have been increased to meet the demands for relocation in South Africa.

"One of the main contributing factors in the increased relocations and semi-gration has been professionals who were commuting between locations for work. With the requirement to work from home during the pandemic, they were forced to work remotely. Even after the pandemic, people have opted to live in these areas as they offer serenity and tranquility, which improves quality of life," said Carla-Mari Moore.

This sentiment has been supported by a real estate expert from one of the leading realtors in Johannesburg. He reported that they have noted movements and have worked closely with moving companies to facilitate the surge in moving houses nationally, which has only been increasing since the onset of Covid-19.
