

Time to bring back the passion in digital marketing

By Mark Botha

7 Aug 2023

Currently, the state of digital advertising leaves much to be desired. Maybe it's my old-fashioned perspective, but I believe there are several essential elements lacking in the delivery of impactful advertising campaigns.

Source: www.unsplash.com

I run with a friend in the industry, and on one run, in between coughing up a lung, we got into a debate as to whether digital campaigns are strategically planned as creative solutions or if they are merely volume-driven placements that utilise subpar creatives to meet the goal of ticking a box by reaching mass audiences.

Mediocre results

I know which side of the fence I sit on when it comes to this argument, and this position is driven by two key facts. Firstly, many campaigns that are briefed in come with very little insight on what the actual objectives and KPI's of the campaign are.

Secondly, when last did you actually see a rich media campaign, or a digital creative execution that made you sit up and think, "Wow, that is impressive!", or made you want to actually share it with a colleague or friend? There just doesn't seem to be enough time, or capacity to dig deep into each campaign and build solutions that are unique; speak to the campaign requirements; and above all surprise or delight consumers.

Contextual relevant digital channels count rather than scale

Mark Botha 27 Mar 2023

The inherent nature of the digital medium dictates the fact that it is a volume-driven medium, and when it comes to advertising, more often than not, quantity sadly beats quality. Instead of dedicating time to crafting a thoroughly planned and executed campaigns, the typical outcome tends to be mediocre creative executions that, despite themselves, still manage to achieve results.

There seems to be this prevailing notion that says, "If I throw enough mud against the wall, something is bound to stick, right?" However, in so doing, you may be winning the battle and delivering mass audiences, but you certainly aren't going to be winning the war for hearts and minds when it comes to building your brand and developing a longer-term commitment toward your products.

Real people

Tech is amazing, and we should be embracing the good things that algorithms; programmatic buying and the sheer scale that digital brings to the table. I still however firmly believe that working with real people who care about their relationship with you, who are committed to providing you the best solutions that they can, and who have a keen interest in delivering on your KPI's, counts for a lot.

Besides all of this, when did we forget that people actually love some of the media brands they consume? That they trust and respect the opinions voiced on the platforms they visit every day, and above all, that they consider any brands running on those publications to be endorsed by them, making consumers that much more likely to convert?

I believe that advertising in reputable publications, which feature professionally written, fact-based articles, and are associated with premium brands that align with your own, is important. We should be evaluating each campaign based on its own merits and providing the best solution, on the best platform rather than running mass-reach campaigns that are essentially replicas of successful plans that targeted similar audiences.

Somewhere along the line, we started to settle for less when it comes to digital and ticking boxes became much more important than doing things the right way and ensuring we do the best job for our advertisers.

I remember walking into Hunt Lascaris a few years ago and emblazoned across their reception wall, was a quote by James C. Collins which I believe is apt with where we find ourselves with digital advertising – "Good is the Enemy of Great."

ABOUT MARK BOTHA

Having been in the industry for over 15 years, I have also built and managed award-winning teams and have been lucky enough to work with some of the best people in the industry. I am excited about the future of digital and to continuing my work in this exciting medium

- Time to bring back the passion in digital marketing - 7 Aug 2023
- Contextual relevant digital channels count rather than scale - 27 Mar 2023
- Covid catapults digital audio - 9 Dec 2021
- Is it premium versus programmatic or premium and programmatic? - 29 Jul 2019
- Four reasons that digital sponsorships provide exceptional ROI for SA brands - 8 Apr 2019

View my profile and articles...