Anna Collard

ISACA is a global association that provides IT professionals with knowledge, credentials, training and community in audit, governance, risk, privacy and security.

The ISACA South Africa Awards are the highest honours bestowed by the Chapter on individuals in appreciation of their active roles in the field of technology, information and cybersecurity, governance, risk and innovation in South Africa.

The President's Award recipient is selected solely by the president and is presented for dedication to service and leadership within the field in South Africa.

The award recognises Collard's leadership, excellence and professionalism in cybersecurity awareness training. Collard started Popcorn Training, a KnowBe4 company, seven years ago and made it one of the first companies to globally use story-based, engaging video and gaming content to teach people how to stay safe online. Popcorn has been recognised with multiple international awards for its content, and Collard was also recognised with an Innovations Throughout Africa award at Women in Tech Africa earlier this year.

"Anna is a well-respected cybersecurity leader and entrepreneur who built her security awareness training organisation from the ground up," said Stu Sjouwerman, CEO at KnowBe4. "She holds many globally recognised certifications and is a sought-after speaker. Anna deserves this recognition and KnowBe4 is proud to have her as part of the team."

"I'm delighted to be awarded this honour, which I believe recognises the efforts of the local and global KnowBe4 teams to take a new and more effective approach to security training," said Collard.
