The locally relevant campaign to get people texting in their mother tongues counted amongst the world's best ideas.

MOBILE PHONES GET A VERNAC MAKEOVER BECAUSE NOT EVERYBODY TEXTS IN DUCKING ENGLISH

PROBLEM: South Africa is no longer a British colony, but our phones are still colonised. Autocorrect still only recognises one of our 11 official languages. You guessed it... English. Although there have been attempts to teach Spelled: to spell our names, no-one's tried to teach our mobile devices, used for our most intimate communication, to speak our South African languages. And it's killing our indigenous languages.

SOLUTION: Savanna Older, South Africa's most-loved older, got ducking tired of this and set out to liberate people's phones through a simple hack. Phones don't autocorrect anything saved in your contacts. So we created contact files for each of South Africa's other 10 official languages. Each contact file was populated with the 500 of the most-used words in each language. We then made the files available for users to download and save. When saved, autocorrect 'recognises' the words and doesn't try to change them. The lowly contact file was turned into an instrument of emancipation.

HOW IT WORKS:
1. Visit the mobile site <https://savannacider.com/decolonise>
2. Choose your preferred language(s)
3. Save the custom .vcf file to your contacts
4. Your texts have been liberated

RESULTS:
Downloads per day during the campaign, across all 11 languages.
700+
Downloads continue despite the campaign having ended.

Exactly two years after Grey Africa opened the doors of WPP Team Liquid, the bespoke agency solution for Distell, the agency celebrates its first haul of international awards on the Savanna account. Including four of South Africa's 19 finalists at the prestigious One Show Awards held last week in New York.

The brilliant but deceptively simple mobile hack to help people text in their own language resonated with jurors the world over and amidst the highly competitive field of big budget, cutting-edge technologies in the Mobile category at this year's One Show Awards, it brought home South Africa's only two Merits in the category - one in Mobile Utility and another in Mobile Innovation and Transformation.

"It's brilliant to see locally relevant work on a proudly South African brand like Savanna getting international recognition. This is extremely encouraging as we continue our goal to take the brand to exciting new heights," says Steph van Niekerk, creative director Grey Africa working on the Savanna account.

This impressive win follows on the D&AD Awards, where #DecoloniseAutocorrect was shortlisted for Use of Mobile in the Impact category, accounting for South Africa's only finalist in the Impact programme, which supports and recognises work that benefits society. Known as the hardest show in the world, a D&AD shortlist is enough to merit points on the official Creative Circle rankings, which recognises five award shows (One Show, D&AD, Cannes, Loeries and Creative Circle's annual awards).

Yes indeed folks, another accolade for Savanna's #DecoloniseAutocorrect

Earlier this year, the campaign also took home a Silver Clio in the Mobile category.

Grey Advertising Africa's chief creative officer, Fran Luckin, explains: "It is so gratifying to see this piece being recognised by international judges on a global stage."

"Being awarded in the pioneering Digital/Mobile - Emerging Technologies category is testament to our effectiveness in navigating the industry with game-changing campaigns and illustrates the value of sticking with a creative idea for as long as it takes to execute. Over two years in the making, 'Decolonise Auto Correct' has finally stepped into the limelight," Luckin concludes.
